About the Learner Journal Collection:
Consisting of eleven journals, The Learner Journal Collection explores the meaning and purpose of education, with a focus on innovative pedagogies and a view to new social possibilities through education. Established in 1995, The Learner Journal Collection is indexed by Scopus, China National Knowledge Infrastructure (CNKI Scholar), EBSCO, Genamics, The Australian Research Council, and Ulrich's Periodicals Directory. The journal offers both personal and institutional subscriptions and is published electronically and in print. For more information, please visit https://thelearner.com/journals/collection.

About Common Ground Research Networks:
The journals in the Learner  Journal Collection are among the sixty-four scholarly journals published by Common Ground Research Networks. Common Ground, which was founded in 1984, seeks to take the pivotal ideas and challenges at play within established disciplines and create spaces for interaction that cut horizontally across legacy knowledge structures. As a result, in addition to providing a space for publication within its catalog of journals and their associated book imprints, Common Ground encourages researchers and practitioners to meet at the annual academic conferences that it organizes around the world and then connect and share their work virtually using CGScholar, Common Ground's innovative social knowledge software. Common Ground Research Networks uses a two-way anonymous peer review system and adheres to the standards of expected ethical behavior as based on the Committee on Publication Ethics (COPE) Core Practices.
